Beautiful Oakwood Cemetery.

To The Bloomfield Citizen

It was my privilege to visit, a few weeks since, this silent city of the dead and I shall attempt to give your readers a faint description of its charms and special points of interest.

It is beautiful; beautiful for location and beautiful in its improvements. Containing over 300 acres of land, it extends for about one and a half mile along the brow of an abrupt range of hills averaging 300 or more feet above the level of the Hudson River. The view is grand indeed, over looking as it does the cities of Troy, Lansingburgh, Cohoes and other "Trojan" suburbs. Away to the south the Catskills, to the West, the beautiful Mohawk Valley with Cohoes Falls in the foreground, and taking in the ranges of distant hills and mountains presents a panoramic view of nearly 100 miles in extent.

The rolling nature of the ground gives an excellent opportunity for landscape gardening that has been fully improved. Lots sold since 1873 have been with a provision for perpetual care by the Cemetery authorities so that the major part, and all of the newer portions are kept in nearly perfect order. With its winding drive ways, crossing ravines through which are running little streams of water, with an occasional artificial lake, located where the effect will be most pleasing to the eye, and on their bosom serenely quiet and in keeping with the purposes of the place, are wild swan and other aquatic birds, which not only are an attractive feature of the landscape but serve to keep the water pure—with rare shrubs and plants meeting the eye at every turn, frequent visits not only do not tire one but seem to make the place more and more attractive. We almost forget that we are in the company of the dead—in a city of 10,000 silent inhabitants—but in one of earth's quietest and choicest beauty spots. One of the pleasing features of the place is the lack of sameness. The different platts are large with no apparant dividing lines between the individual lots and with not a square platt in the cemetery.

The place was consecrated and first opened for burial October 16, 1850, and since then it has truly become a "City of the Dead," as its occupants now number over 10,000. Among those most widely known who found a last resting place here are Maj. Gen. John E. Wool, to whose memory has been erected an obelisk of Fox Island (Me.) granite 75 feet 6 inches high, said to be the tallest single shaft of granite ever quarried in the United States. Its glistening sides on a clear day are a feature of the landscape, as from its position it can be seen at a great distance. A hundred feet or so from Gen. Wool's tomb is the burial place of the hero of Chickamanga, Gen. Geo. H. Thomas. An Italian marble sarcophagus marks his resting place. It rests on a plinth of fine hammered Maine granite, and is surmounted by an eagle of heroic size with wings half poised. A sword and sash are held in the claws of the eagle. I never pass this monument without feeling like lifting my hat in reverence for the grand hero. It seems quite appropriate for these two men who so nobly represented the worth of their country in wars so widely separated in point of time, one to repel a foreign enemy and one to subdue enemies of our own blood, should lie so close together and in so prominent a place to teach, the many visitors (some pleasant days numbering 2000 or over) lessons of patriotism. The many graves in the portion (not far distant) set apart for the burial of ex soldiers of the rebellion, with the G. A. R. emblems dotting not only these but other graves in various parts of the grounds, help to impress these lessons.

In this cemetery occupying one of the commanding locations, is probably the best equipped crematory in the world, a gift to the cemetery Association by William S. Earl, as a memorial of his son, the late Gardner Earl of the famed collar manufacturing firm of Earl & Wilson, whose body was cremated at Buffalo in April of 1887. This is a massive stone structure with the most approved appliances for the purpose intended. The building, with the chapel for services to be held in connection with the cremation of bodies, and a high and massive tower, was erected at a cost of over $100,000. The fact that the building was completed nearly a year ago, at so great a cost with but one subject as yet for its offices, does not speak well for the popularity of this mode of disposing of our dead.

There are many other objects of interest, and other persons of note buried here but this article is of sufficient length. To sum up in closing—The drive through these grounds, from its entrance of massive granite columns and a wealth of flowering plants on the lower plateau, up through its winding driveways to the hill tops, with the panoramic views of the Hudson River Valley and distant hills and mountains therefrom, to the higher exit through a broad street lined with flowering and rare shrubs, and small trees, where are located the offices of the cemetery Association, can be made to occupy several hours of very great pleasure, a ride long to be remembered, and a cemetery that is a credit to the good taste and wealth of the Trojan City.

G. T. Moore.

The Cannon on the Green.

To the Citizen:

Under the above heading one B. B. comes out in your issue of the 12th inst. with an artful and insidious piece to tickle the battery boys withal and at the same time keep their operations away from his own neighborhood and fasten them on that of others. He makes much ado about your quotation from John Adams' letter and says that some body who reads it ought to be ashamed of himself. Let B. B. look in the glass and he will see who it is. A more cheeky piece of pretense it has not happened to the readers of The Citizen to meet with. He is in favor, he says, of those patriotic explosions, and the general judgment he informs us is clear that they should take place at the flag staff, so that all the inhabitants can hear: those living at a distance from it, as he does have difficulty, he says, in hearing distinctly. It is too much for patience, such aggravating coolness! Who I wish to ask is B. B? He was thinking doubtless when he wrote his specious paper of the battery boys, but he is no member or associate of that honorable troop. They do not go for things in that cunning, round-about way, but blow their utterances straight out and make themselves heard and understood. No: B. B. is no more a battery boy than he is Brother Blaine.

He brings in Mr. Hayter, Doctor Stubbert and Judge Dodd to help out his purpose and represents them as thinking highly of the flag staff salutes. Now I would not speak disrespectfully of either of those Citizens, but as to their speeches, to which B. B. refers, what do they amount to? How does it appear as he would have us believe, that the park people set great store by the privilege of seeing and hearing the cannon go off? Does Mr. Hayter, that gallant soldier, live there? Does he know what the people wish? Is he acquainted, for instance with the ladies who live at Mr. Baxter's or any of the homes along that or the other side of the Green? I think it likely not, and I much wish he was (as I am sure also they do too) that his eloquent and sympathetic nature might take in, as it certainly would, their feelings on the subject, but there is no reason to say that he favors the flag staff as the spot for the business, but only the celebration in that way, somewhere. Doctor Stubbert it is true lives at one end of the Green but the furthest end and a long way from the flag staff, and so far as is known does not specially favor that point. Besides this the Doctor is not of sensitive nerves, has no little ones to keep asleep, and like most speakers and orators is not unaccustomed to reverberating sounds. As for what Judge Dodd said at the meeting in the hall, of which B. B. makes so much, does he not know that the meeting saw through that effort of the Judge to make the suburbans think that the shooting was a fine thing which only unselfish feeling on the part of the park folks make them willing to part with? If B. B. does not know it, then Booby Boy is the name for him. Those in the meeting who lived away from the park, openly laughed at his proposals as entirely too thin, while of the park people present the judicious only grieved at so unlucky an attempt. The Judge's move was not a success. In vain is the net spread in sight of any bird. The next time we hope he will discard the arts of the advocate and plainly speak out the dislike of the thunderous racket that we all think he feels.

No argument in defence of the racket there can be drawn from anything Adams wrote to his wife. Does anyone believe he would have advised the battery boys to shoot their gun at day break before the windows of her room where little John Quincy was asleep when a year or so old, in his second summer and cutting his teeth? John Adams was a brave man but he would never have done that. In no transport of enthusiasm would it have occurred to him to propose such a thing. Any one who knows what Abigail Smith was will be sure of it, and if the battery boys had ventured on it of their own heads, not one of them would have lived to this day.

Like all truly great men, John Adams was possessed of good common sense and well knew that circumstances alter cases. When he wrote that the day should be solemnized with pomp and parade, with show, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations, he meant all to be done at proper places. Therefore B. B. is a shallow thinker when he imagines that these words prove that the cannon in Bloomfield should send its thunders as he says from centre to circumference. Does it do so in Newark, in Orange, anywhere in a populous place like ours? Let these things be calmly and rationally considered. Let some elevated, suitable point be selected where the artillery corps of this town combining with the companies of adjacent town shall take a position say at Mt. Prospect, and from that height serene send forth their animating sounds in the morning, at noon, and at dewy eve over all the rejoicing thousands, from the mountain to the sea. Think of it good battery boys, and if you will do it, we will vote money enough to buy you another cannon and plenty of powder for the two. Do.
